with a bouquet recently at Sheedy's Theatre, New Bedford, Mass. A bouquet of what? There are other things besides flowers, you know, and I have heard a brick called a bouquet by a forgetful actor, so it's best to be specific in these little matters.Harry Thomson, the mayor of the Bowery, has hit the West like a cyclone. He has been entertained by real mayors and other dignitaries, as well as lodges of which he is a member, and he says that as far as Dennett's is concerned, never again. Nothing below the Waldorf-Astoria for him, and a dress suit every night at 6 sharp.Magee and Dale have bought a trained goat, which they are going to use in their burlesque on "Quo Vadis." A trained goat, however, doesn't always act.
There was an actor who once brought a "trained goat" on the stage to do a turn, and Billy forgot his cue and sent the mummer into the orchestra, after which he held stage centre against four scene shifters.The Franciscus Company, now on tour under

VIRGINIA HAREM

FOUND BY LOST TRAVELLER

IN THE MOUNTAINS

Young Girls Stolen From Home in Moonshiner's Cave.

BOTH HELD PRISONERS

Accidentally Discovered by a Man Who Tried to Cross the Wild Country.

There is a business man in Hinton, W. Va., who has had the experience of his life, and he doesn't care to repeat it, either. He tried to make a short cut to a place called Green Bank, Pocahontas County, and he had reached a rather wild spot when he heard a click and was ordered to hold up his hands. The fellow who held the Winchester was a rough-looking mountaineer, and he remarked, as he half lowered the gun.

"Young fellow, are you ready to hand in your checks?"

But here is the tale in the Hinton man's own words: "I knew he thought I was an officer, so in a few words I told him my story. He gave a chuckle, and, dropping the end of his Winchester on the ground, requested me to come near.

"Show me out of this place before thick darkness," I begged.

"It is now dark. You are eight miles from the nearest house. I see you are badly scared. I wish to talk further with you, but have not decided whether you go from this place or not."

"Regarding me attentively for a moment, he added: 'Swear to me you will not reveal what you see, and I will keep you over night and perchance deliver you in the morning.'

"I told him I would accept his offer of hospitality and would not reveal his place of rendezvous.

"Come," he said and I followed. Not thirty yards from where we stood he entered a cave, which soon opened into a fine chamber. Bright lights were burning and at the far side of this chamber was a small fire, over which an old hag-like looking creature seemed to be engaged in cooking. The old sorcerer cast a viperish look at me and blurted out a word I did not quite understand.

"Seated on rough wooden slabs in various places were four men and two young women. The men were of the type of my host in appearance, and they eyed me with no welcome greeting.

"He is lost, and I brought him in for the night," said my host.

"He is a revenue officer. Why didn't you shoot him?" said one in a vicious tone, and I felt just then as if I would never see the sun rise again.

"Around the walls of living rock I saw many guns, knives and revolvers. Also many evidences of the hunt in the shape of furs and skins of animals. I took in all these things at a glance, and then rested my eyes on the young women, whose appearance presented quite a contrast to their companions.

"They were young—not more than twenty. They had once been pretty, and traces of beauty had not entirely left them. But I never saw before such sorrow as was depicted in the faces of these women, as they sat in silence looking at me as though I might be their deliverer from this rock-walled harem, and a fate more cruel, yes, a hundred times more cruel, than death.

"One of the two particularly attracted my attention. She was of blonde complexion, attired in a gray woollen gown that fitted her form to perfection. Upon her feet, which were very small, she wore a pair of soiled and ragged though daintily-shaped slippers, clasped over the instep with silver buckles. Her skirts were just the proper length to display a pair of the most graceful ankles I have ever seen. Her hair, of bright golden color, and as fine as silk, hung in negligent confusion down her back. Her eyes, once brilliant, presented a sunken, melancholy appearance, and the deepest sorrow was visible in every lineament. Never a word of any kind was spoken by either of these women.

"About 4 o'clock in the morning two of the men came to me and told me I would be taken on my journey. A blindfold was placed over my eyes, and I was led by the two men back through the underground chamber for a distance I could not judge. In passing one point the fumes of sour mash seemed to reach my nose.

"I was led with care for some distance and the blindfold removed. I looked in the direction of the rising sun and beheld the valley of the Greenbrier river, dotted with cheerful homes.

"Here I received some further instructions as to how I should proceed on my journey and how I must act in regard to what I had seen. I was then ordered to depart, and thus I left them.

"By noon I was in Greenbank, and I have never heard of my hosts since, unless it was from an article in a country newspaper some time afterward, where I read of someone finding a bottle afloat in the Greenbrier.

"In the bottle was a note written in red ink or blood, and signed by a name which I cannot now recall, giving her postoffice in Virginia, and saying she had been stolen from her friends and carried into a wilderness, she knew not where; and that she and others of her sex were now the victims of a notorious band of moonshiners."

The POLICE GAZETTE next week will contain the best assortment of portraits of Jeffries and Ruhlin in training ever seen.

POISON ENDS ROMANCE

BEGUN IN CHILDHOOD WHEN AT SCHOOL,

WOMAN DIED; MAN LIVES

Both Were Married, but the Woman's Love Was too Strong to Admit of a Permanent Separation.

"I LOVED HIM BETTER THAN ANYTHING."

She Wrote a Pathetic Little Note in Which She Briefly Explained Why Life Had No Further Charms For Her and Then She Took Poison.

An especially dramatic story—dramatic because of a side-tracked love and the death of a woman who had made a mistake in life—finds its scene in Chicago, where a beautiful woman, who was an apparently happy wife and the mother of three charming children, killed herself sooner than be separated from the man she loved, and with her, in the same room, was the man—prominent in Chicago society, and apparently happy in the possession of a pretty wife—almost unconscious from the effects of gas, which was pouring out of four jets, and from a quantity of morphine he had taken in an attempt to end his life. Falling in these measures he had jabbed a hatpin into his neck, but the wound was not serious. He was barely able to speak when an entrance was forced into the room, and the lifeless body of the woman was found stretched upon the bed.

The tragic ending of a love affair which had begun years ago was discovered about 4 o'clock in the morning by the housekeeper, who was attracted to the room they were occupying by the odor of escaping gas. Failing to get a response by rapping on the door, she summoned help and admittance was demanded. Finally the door was opened. Within the man was found on the floor, where he had collapsed after unlocking the door, and upon the bed was the woman's body. Pointing to three empty vials which had contained morphine and to the bed he mutely told the story of the tragedy. All the gas jets in the room were turned on, and he was fast lapsing into unconsciousness. A physician and the police of the Twenty-second street station were summoned. An examination showed that the woman had been dead some time. On the dresser a note was found in a woman's handwriting which read:

To WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I did it because I loved him better than anything on earth, and he loved me, and we could not be separated. Good-bye.

The man was placed in a cab and hurried to the Twenty-second street station, where the doctor worked over him and succeeded in arousing him. He then told his story to Lieutenant Cronin.

"The woman, who is now dead, and I met in Memphis, Tenn., when we were very young. We were in love with each other, but while she was still a girl she married. I left shortly after that for Chicago, where I went into business. But our love was still as strong as ever, and she came to Chicago to be near me. We were together nearly every day and we were very happy, but neither my wife nor her husband knew of our friendship.

"There were times when she seemed remorseful because of the dual life she was leading. The other morning I met her by appointment, as usual, and we went downtown together. I saw her again in the evening and she talked of suicide and wanted me to die with her. I argued with her, but my talk didn't seem to have much effect.

"About 2 o'clock in the morning we went to the hotel, and after we had reached the room she called for a pencil and paper and wrote a note. After we had talked for awhile she asked me if I wouldn't die with her. Then I told her I would.

"She sent me out for a bottle of morphine with which I was to end my life, saying that she had enough of the drug to kill herself.

"She kept saying she was so happy and contented and talked about death being so sweet. Some time early in the morning I was awakened and found her dying. In a feeble voice she said:

"You will find the rest of the morphine on the dresser. I have taken my share. Good-bye."

"Then she died.

"I took the morphine and sat down. I knew there was not enough of it to kill me, so I removed the pin from her hat and thrust it into my neck, but couldn't reach a vital spot. I wanted to die, and so turned on the gas. I wish it had finished me."

When the police went to the woman's home to notify her husband they found three children alone in the house. They said their father had gone out to look for "mamma," who had been away all night. In the meantime the husband called at the undertaker's, and, with tears streaming down his face, identified the body as that of his wife. The woman was twenty-seven years of age, well dressed and pretty, with refined, clean cut features and curly hair that hung below her waist. She was the mother of the three children who were found in the house by the police.

All of the people are said to belong to prominent families in the South, and the tragedy has created surprise and consternation among their friends.

The dead woman and her family were to have left for Louisville on November 1, and she did not want to be separated from the man she loved. One of the features of the case came out at the inquest, when a woman employee of the house at which they stopped, testified that when she knocked on the door of the room the man responded, and that he gave her ten cents with which to buy some carbolic acid. He said he had tried to kill himself and wanted more poison to finish the job.

The verdict ran: "We, the jury, sitting in inquest over the body of ———, find that the deceased came to her death on October 20, as the result of morphine poisoning. We, the jury, are not, however, able to determine whether or not the drug was self-administered, and we recommend that the prisoner be held to the Grand Jury until discharged by due process of law."

According to a statement by an official of the State's Attorney's office, if facts presented be true, the man can be held for murder by the Grand Jury.

"If the man knew his companion intended to commit suicide,

She Said She Would Rather Die Than Be Separated From Him, As She Loved Him Better Than Anything in All the World.

and that she had the poison—in fact, bought some of the drug with which the act was performed—he is an accessory before the fact and is guilty of murder."

WHOOPED THINGS UP.

[SUBJECT OF ILLUSTRATION.]

The boys who go to the college at Springfield, Ohio, made up their minds the other evening that something ought to be done to enliven things a bit, and after a brief discussion a brilliant young freshman suggested a pillow fight with the girl co-eds. The idea caught on at once, and in less than half an hour a pillow-armed brigade, shoeless and ready for action, was stealing quietly through the halls of one of the dormitories.

The girls of Springfield, especially the college girls, are not very slow. They had heard of the expected attack and were ready for the party. So it happened that when one of the advance guard gently opened a door he found a dark room and no resistance.

"Come on, fellows," he said, in a whisper that could have been heard half a block. "Come on, everything is all right."

So they "came on," but when half a dozen had crowded into the room they were suddenly attacked from all sides. Then the lights were turned on and they saw they had been ambushed. They were routed, and as they hurried out to escape the fusillade they were sarcastically invited to call again.

GIRLIES CHASE THE PIGSKIN.

[SUBJECT OF ILLUSTRATION.]

The girls of Detroit, Mich., have taken a rather sudden and unaccountable fancy to the game of football, and as a result two teams have organized to play the game on an especial gridiron. For the past month a muscular instructor has been coaching them in the art of punt and tackle, and some of them have become very expert at it.

Already one game has been played, and the girls put up a very warm specimen. To be sure, some of them looked rather dishevelled when time was called, but they were happy, just the same, and the winning eleven carried its captain off the field in ecstasy.

GIRL IN NIGHTGOWN

RUSHED IN AND

BROKE UP CAUCUS

She Was Demented, but She Played Havoc With Politics.

WOMAN WAS A SOLDIER

For Four Months She Deceived the Officers of Fort Sheridan, Ill.

The Republicans who were holding a caucus at West Mansfield, O., the other night had a little excitement which was not down on the bills and which, for a time, threatened to break up the show.

Some of the most eloquent speakers of the county had delivered their perorations, and the audience had been roused to the proper pitch of Republican enthusiasm, when a rather good-looking young woman, who was clothed in a night-dress, rushed into the hotel where the caucus was being held, shrieking at the top of her lungs. She dashed into the room, waving her arms wildly about her head and uttering the most frightful cries.

There was a stampede at once among the politicians at the apparition, and a great many succeeded in getting out of the room before the brothers of the young woman, who was evidently demented, succeeded in overtaking her and leading her away.

But the backbone had been taken out of the meeting and there wasn't a speaker on hand who could command enough attention to be heard.

The next day she was taken to Bellefontaine for examination, and later committed to the insane asylum at Toledo. She insisted that her name was Emma Goldman.

"She" Was a Soldier "Boy."

Disguised in the uniform of a United States soldier, a comely matron of Chicago passed herself off as a man. And it is more than likely that she would have been doing duty yet but an accident to her three-year-old daughter so affected her that the secret of her sex was exposed. When that happened she fled, and now it is a question as to whether or not she is a deserter.

During the months that the woman had been at Fort Sheridan she had been living with a tailor. To the public she had passed as his brother. She was in reality his wife.

The little girl who accompanied the "brother" was reported to have lost her mother. In order more fully to conceal her sex the mother placed the girl in the home of Hospital Steward Manning.

The woman soldier assisted her husband in his work as a tailor. She entered into the spirits and revels of the soldiers with all the zest possible to a man, and, it is said, gambled and smoked like a trooper.

The child was injured by a fall, and, lying on a cot, stretched out its arms and sobbed "mamma."

The woman, who was known as Peter White, began to weep, and, dropping on her knee beside the cot, clasped the little girl in her arms. When she had calmed down and was able to talk she admitted to those present that she was the child's mother.

A Girl's Brave Deed.

A fifteen-year-old girl of Cape May, N. J., had an experience the other day which proved her right to be called a heroine. She was driving a spirited horse to a carriage in which were seated her mother and young brother. In some manner some of the harness gave way and let the carriage strike the legs of the horse, which, becoming frightened, started off on a mad gallop which threatened death for all those in the vehicle.

At the earnest solicitation of her daughter the woman succeeded in dropping the little boy out the back of the wagon and also managed to climb out herself, though in so doing she was dragged a considerable distance and painfully injured.

The beast continued its breakneck speed, when the girl climbed out upon the shafts onto the galloping animal's back, succeeded in fastening a strap that had become detached, safely reached her seat in the carriage, and finally succeeded in stopping the wild flight of the horse, after a race of over five miles. Wheeling the horse about she started for home and met her distracted father on his wheel, accompanied by several men and boys, who had tried to overtake the team. And now she is considered the heroine of the county.

JEFFRIES AND RUHLIN WAITING FOR THE BELL TO RING

Fight in San Francisco on November 15 for the Heavyweight Championship of the World.

BOXING EXPERTS ANTICIPATE A GREAT BATTLE

Details of the Match and How the Men Will Fight---Harry Corbett to Interpret the Rules---Training Preparations All Completed.

As the eventful day of the meeting approaches a visible increase in public interest is observed in the battle for the heavyweight championship of the world between James J. Jeffries, of Los Angeles, Cal., and Gus Ruhlman, of Akron, O., which is scheduled to occur on November 15 at San Francisco, Cal., under the auspices of the Twentieth Century Athletic Club. The fact that the two participants have trained rigorously and conscientiously for their part of the proceedings and all the preliminary arrangements have been completed, have inspired a growth of interest, and sporting men all over the country are looking forward to the outcome with the usual amount of anxiety which attaches to a contest of this sort. True, there is something lacking in this contest to make it one of the old-time championship battles, but what it is no one seems to know. Somehow the sports are not as madly wrapped up in the meeting between Ruhlman and Jeff as they were when Sullivan met Corbett or when Corbett fought Mitchell at Jacksonville. Surely as much can be expected out of this meeting as in the Corbett-Mitchell go, but so far the 'Frisco match has failed to attract the attention it deserves.

Jeffries and Ruhlman are the giants of the prize ring, and the very thought of two scientific and experienced men, each weighing over 200 pounds, and more than six feet in height, meeting in the roped arena for the world's championship, should be enough to warm the blood of any man who takes to the noble art of self-defense. While it is admitted that Jeff's record is superior to that of Ruhlman, it must be remembered that Ruhlman has shown himself to be a big, strong fellow, capable of sending to the boards with either hand the toughest kind of game. He beat Tom Sharkey, the rugged sailor, whose brawny form looks like a California redwood tree, and a man who, for a time, was considered invincible in the heavyweight class. Sharkey has gone back, and may not be the fighter he was a few years ago, but when Ruhlman defeated him he was an opponent to be feared by any one of the heavyweights. Then, again, Ruhlman has a draw with Jeffries to his credit, which will give the Akron boy courage in his coming fight, if nothing else.

From a betting point of view the Californian promises to be an overwhelming favorite in the coming championship battle. His admirers will have to give long odds, possibly $100 to $350. On account of the frequency of winners on the short end Ruhlman will have considerable support. It frequently happens that the public makes the wrong favorite. John L. Sullivan was the false choice over Corbett, but there was a reason for it. The people who did not pay close attention to ring affairs labored under the misapprehension that Sullivan was as good as he had always been. But the scrutiny of the records of champions will show that no man has ever done very much after an absence of three years from the roped arena. Of course, this argument does not apply either to Jeffries or Ruhlman. Both should be as good, if not better, than at any time of their careers. The great favoritism of Jeffries is due to the fact that he is present champion, and has never yet suffered defeat, and also that he has a better record than Ruhlman, has defeated more good men. The champion is an extremely cautious fighter, which is another reason for his being such a strong betting choice over Ruhlman.

On recent form Jeffries should dispose of the Akronite long before the twenty rounds are terminated. The manner in which Jeffries put Joe Kennedy to sleep recently proved conclusively that the man who attempts to outlast the big fellow is taking mighty chances. Kennedy bested Ruhlman in a twenty-round bout at 'Frisco in 1890, and had no trouble in holding his own at close quarters with the Ohioan. Jeffries will outweigh Gus by a good many pounds, and his immense strength will stand him in good stead if the Ohio man tries to force matters and exchange punch for punch with the giant brawler. Ruhlman's best chance of victory therefore lies in keeping at a safe distance from his brawny opponent and trusting almost exclusively to the straight left jab. Yet even at this style of mulling Ruhlman's chances of winning the long end of the purse do not shine with any great luster. Big as Jeffries is, he is faster on his feet than Ruhlman, whose lack of agility in getting around a ring has frequently been made the subject of much unfavorable comment by the ring critics. Jim Corbett, the fastest heavyweight that ever donned a glove, outclasses Ruhlman in speed as a Derby winner does a cart horse, yet even active Jim failed to escape being cornered by Jeffries and knocked out in their memorable battle at Coney Island.

There are many good judges of boxing who contend that Ruhlman has not a remote chance of winning—a nonsensical argument. Young, strong and confident he will enter the lists with the champion prepared to do his best and regardless of the odds against him.

Jeffries is not proof against a knockout punch any more than any other human, despite his bulk and ability to stand punishment. Ruhlman is no light hitter, and should he manage to plant the right audacious on the proper spot would probably send Jeff on an unexpected trip to slumberland. This is a contingency not likely to occur, but stranger things have happened in flatland's history.

Meanwhile, the men are going ahead with their labors in a manner which inspires confidence among their respective adherents. Billy Delaney, who handled Jim Corbett in several of his contests and who is now once more the chief adviser of a world's champion, gives an interesting account of the progress of his present charge, James J. Jeffries. Delaney said a few days ago that at a dog trot nearly all uphill and down, at times sprinting for 100 yards, he perspired freely, and when he came in he weighed seven and a half pounds less than when he started. Jeffries was perceptibly tired when he returned. That could be told at a glance at his face, which was somewhat drawn and sunken. But a shower and rub-down quickly freshened him up, and in the afternoon he was ready for his sparring and bag punching.

"The very fact that Jeffries could take off so much weight in a run of ten miles and that after he had, to a great extent, hardened himself by roaming the hills all summer, shows what a lot of superfluous flesh he carries, and what a hard time he has in getting rid of it. Before the next morning he weighed nearly as much as he did before the run, and that notwithstanding he worked for an hour or so in the afternoon and ate only the plainest sort of food."

Ruhlman has recently found it hard work in the cool weather now prevailing on the coast to take off much weight, although this fact is not bothering him much. He is already almost on edge for his fight of Nov. 15th, and with his wind keyed up a little will be ready for the bout.

Ruhlman's daily programme is about as follows: Up early in the morning, he eats a light breakfast and gets out on the road before the fog and wind become unpleasant. He walks and runs from eight to ten miles along the bay shore, increasing the distance slightly at a slightly faster gait.

On his return he is rubbed down, has a shower bath the Californian was in great shape, a glutton for work but using more judgment than at any other time in his career.

"The handball alley is finished at last. It is the finest on the coast and about fifty by thirty feet in size. Here Jeff will do all his boxing, handball playing, skipping the rope, dumbbell work and wrestling. He also has a big platform and pulley weights, and recently he received a rowing machine, which he values highly as an apparatus for mild exercise.

"He plays baseball with a soft ball, billiards, croquet and goes horseback riding, shooting rabbits, quail and other game. A few days ago he was down to 214 pounds, but it hurt him, and he will go into the ring at about 225 pounds.

"We will go to San Francisco a few days before the 15th. While down there he will do a little work, either at the Olympic or Reliance Club. We do not expect to beat Ruhlman without having a fight. Ruhlman is more of a boxer than a fighter, and we will train for a bruising contest. Jeff will make the fight of his life, and after it is all over, with a little rest, we will be ready for any of them—first come, first served."

Jeffries, according to a letter received from Billy Delaney, is having a great deal of trouble getting rid of his superfluous avoirdupois.

"Anybody who doesn't think the champion is training faithfully should have been at Harbin Springs Hotel when he returned from a ten-mile gallop over the mountains the other day," said Delaney. "The weather was intensely hot, and as the champion went and is then ready for a hearty meal. Through the middle of the day he loafed about his training quarters, discussing the events of the day with his trainers and with visitors.

After a simple luncheon, Ruhlman goes into his gymnasium, where he does some bag punching, plays with the medicine ball for awhile, gives the wrist machine a few turns, goes through calisthenic exercises with dumbbells for a few minutes, and then opens his sparring for the day. He puts on the gloves with his trainers and with anyone else who cares to try sparring with him.

When asked if he considers himself the equal of Jeffries in strength, Ruhlman evaded the question to some extent. "That is one of the things we are to determine. I don't think Jeffries will be able to blanket me at close quarters the way he did Sharkey. In every clinch he leaned his entire strength on the sailor and had poor Sharkey's knees sagging. I think I'll be able to straighten him up if he tries any of those dodges with me."

It has been arranged to take moving pictures of the big fight. J. F. Byrne, who represents the veriscope concern, J. C. Kennedy, for the club and the representatives of the men, held a conference the other day to perfect the details. There was a long discussion caused by the anxiety of Delaney to be assured that the apparatus used would not create the same intense heat as the champion fought in in his fight with Sharkey, when photographs of the fight were taken.

Kennedy assured him that a different system was to be employed, in which half the number of lights were to be used. Besides, they were to be higher up, and holes were to be cut in the reflectors so that, while light would be thrown upon the ring, the heat would be permitted to escape to the ceiling.

SMALL TALK ABOUT THE PUGS

Lively Gossip of Interest Concerning the Doings of the Fighters.

The Jeffries-Ruhlman fight by rounds will appear in next week's POLICE GAZETTE in full. All the details from a special correspondent.

Matchmaker Charles Houghton, of the West End Athletic Club at St. Louis, has decided on Nov. 18 as the date for the Yanger-White battle.

The Chicago boxing game is flourishing right now, and the fighters are happier than they have been since McGovern put that last rap on Joseph Gans.

A matchmaker in Trenton, N. J., is trying to secure a meeting between young Peter Jackson and "Rube" Ferns. Jackson is said to be looking for a match with Joe Walcott.

Joe Bernstein will leave for the East in a few weeks. He has been offered matches with Clarence Forbes and the Tipton Slasher and will go back to wipe a few things off their reputations.

"Kid" O'Donnell, the Philadelphia featherweight, is a great lover of running when he is training. O'Donnell wants to run any man in Philadelphia a twenty-four-hour race, four hours a night for six nights, or he will make it a sweepstakes, open to all runners.

Terry McGovern, the featherweight champion, who is at present in Chicago, has challenged any fighter in the world to meet him at 122 pounds. Benny Yanger, of Chicago, is named in particular.

"Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien, who is now in England, refused recently to meet the "Coffee Cooler" for a $500 purse.

Bob Armstrong, trainer of Jim Jeffries, and Ed Martin, trainer of Gus Ruhlman, will meet at San Francisco on November 25.

Billy Whistler, of Baltimore, was given the decision on points over Jimmy Kelly, of New York, in their ten-round bout recently at Baltimore.

Harry Corbett, who has been chosen to referee the Jeffries-Ruhlman fight, while hunting in the Frazier mountains, California, the other day, killed a bear which weighed 600 pounds.

The Chicago sports appear to be determined not to let poor old Griffo keep on the retired list. They have again resurrected him, and are going to stack him against Jack Daly.

Jimmy Scanlan, the Pittsburg middleweight, now in Australia, writes that Snow Sturgeon is now the boss boxer in the Antipodes. He is so good that Scanlan says he wants none of Sturgeon's game.

Though Australian Tim Murphy, brother of the erratic Australian featherweight, got the decision over Martin Judge in six rounds at Chicago the other night, his showing was a big disappointment.

The fight which was scheduled to take place at Tamaqua, Pa., on October 20 between Dan Creedon and Jack Bonner, was prevented by High Sheriff S. R. Beddall, who with a deputy and a posse forbade the contest to go on.

"Rube" Ferns says Tommy Ryan backed out of the match with him. He hinted that the middleweight was not overcautious in carrying out the conditions called for in the articles. Ferns, however, says that he is ready for anybody.

Although Young Mowatt got the decision over Toby Irwin at Oakland, Cal., the other night, there was nothing in the Chicago boxer's work to stamp him a champion. So far Mowatt has failed to make good to any great extent on the Pacific Coast.

A very large audience saw the twenty-round contest between "Mysterious Billy" Smith and Tom Tracy, of Australia, at Portland, Ore., on October 25. The men went twenty rounds to a draw. It was a clever sparring match and nothing more.

Thomas Sharkey and his manager, Barney Reich, have gone to San Francisco to see the Jeffries-Ruhlman fight, which takes place there on Nov. 15. Reich will challenge the winner of the fight on Sharkey's behalf.

"Kid" McCoy and his friend, Charley Mitchell, are in London, having made the trip across the ocean without any mishaps. The "Kid," so a report has it, will start a boxing school in London. McCoy is liable to start any old thing at any old time.

Sam Fitzpatrick has arranged a match between Bill Hanrahan, the former amateur middleweight champion, and Marvin Hart, the crack Southern pugilist. The two are to come together before the Empire A. C., Louisville, on Nov. 25.

Thomas Devlin, of County Tyrone, Ireland, who is said to be the best middleweight in Erin, is after a match with Jack O'Brien. To show how good he is he says he will undertake to stop any English boxer, middle or heavy, in three rounds, or forfeit $250.

Tommy Ryan and Jack Graham have signed articles of agreement for a bout to be pulled off near Kansas City on Nov. 20. The articles are in accordance with the sweeping challenge Ryan issued in which he undertook to stop any man of his weight in ten rounds.

—WHEN THEY FIGHT FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP—

TO DEFEAT RUHLIN QUICKLY

The Akron Man's Nervousness in the Early Stages of a Fight May Enable the Champion to Win in a Few Rounds.

COMPARISONS WHICH MERIT CONSIDERATION.

The Californian Depends Upon His Seconds to Advise Him When to Exert Himself. Something About His Fights with Sharkey, Fitzsimmons and Corbett.

How will the next big championship fight between Jeffries and Ruhlman result? It is just at present an engaging topic of conversation among those who follow up the fighters and are interested in their doings. The consensus of opinion among those who have a knowledge of the merits of the men is that Jeffries will win in from thirteen to seventeen rounds. I believe, too, that the Los Angeles man will win, but I believe the end will be reached by a knockout inside of five rounds. If it goes beyond that the probabilities are that it will go twenty, and the responsibility of deciding a winner will devolve upon Harry Corbett, the referee. Ruhlman, as everybody who has ever seen him fight knows, is a slow beginner. The man is handicapped with a nervous disposition. He lacks the temperament to anticipate the outcome of a fight in a philosophical way. The few days immediately preceding a battle find him struggling with doubts and fears about the probable outcome, and the consequence is that when the crucial moment arrives he is in a condition of nervous excitement, which precludes all possibility of his doing himself justice until two or three rounds have been fought, when confidence in himself returns and he is able to display his real ability.

In all his fights that I have witnessed he invariably impressed me with the idea that he was afraid of the man in front of him. He begins by feeling and feinting—not in an intelligent way which suggests a desire to analyze his opponent's weak points, but more as if he feared to get into the game. Every movement of his rival was met with an effort to sidestep the culminating impact, and his nervous eagerness to avoid blows is easily manifest. This sort of thing usually lasts for three rounds when a sudden metamorphosis occurs. He apparently begins to realize what he is there for; the whole attitude of the man changes as if by magic. From the pale, listless non-combatant he evolves into the man of action. He evinces a disposition to force the issue, becomes active, aggressive and eager to demonstrate the splendid boxing ability he possesses. Then there is no questioning his gameness, his fears have obviously disappeared and he begins to fight, and fight well, cautiously and intelligently until the end. The fact that he is not a punisher is responsible for so many of his fights going the limit and resulting in either defeat or even honors.

Had he been strong enough to land a decisive punch the first time he fought Jeffries it is doubtful if the latter would have attained the eminent position he now holds in the pugilistic world. Ruhlman was the cleverer man on that occasion, comparative novice though he was, but his cleverness was not sufficient to win, lacking as it did the essential quality of force behind his blows, and a draw was obviously the only verdict that could be rendered. Jeffries did not know as much then as he does now, but was strong enough to equalize matters during the final rounds and thereby earn a draw. Ruhlman's subsequent fights with men of minor ability like Tut Ryan, "Texas Billy" Smith, and Wolf Bendoff gave no indication of his ability. McCoy cut him to ribbons in a twenty-round fight at Syracuse, and while it might have been possible for McCoy to have ended matters summarily any time he felt so inclined, Ruhlman was unable to hit him effectively or hard enough to do any damage, and McCoy kept him under fire until the end, content to receive the decision, about which there was obviously no question. In this fight Ruhlman displayed the nervousness which I refer to, but McCoy either did not see through his tactics or preferred not to take advantage of the chances thus afforded him.

Tom Sharkey was on to Ruhlman's weakness, however, the first time they met at Coney Island, for almost instantaneously with the ringing of the gong for the first round he went to the "Dutchman" and crossed him with one on the jaw while the latter was backing away. Dunkhorst, "the human freight car," big, lumbering, fat, awkward, and a stiff of the worst kind, lasted twenty-two rounds in front of Ruhlman, a fact which, more than anything else, speaks for the quality of the latter's punching ability. Peter Maher is a slow beginner himself, and his fight with Ruhlman, which lasted twenty rounds to a draw, might have been concluded in the first few rounds if the Irishman had been disposed to go in and fight from the outset. Ruhlman proved to be cleverer than Maher at the end, but the latter was there with a punch, and so it ended with honors even. Then Ruhlman lost to Joe Kennedy, the "Frisco" fighter, in twenty rounds, and form players, who recall how easily the latter was whipped by Maher at the Broadway Athletic Club, and only a few weeks ago by Jeffries, find him a medium for the argument that Ruhlman has no chance whatever to win from Jeffries, considering the marvellous improvement which the latter has shown.

Everybody who saw Sharkey's last fight with Ruhlman will recall how desperately the sailor tried for the first five or six rounds to "nail" Ruhlman before he got his "ring legs." But in doing so he weakened himself and finally became too tired to keep his hands up. A light punch on the jaw was enough to send Sharkey to the carpet. Fitzsimmons, who is a student and knows well the points, weak and strong, of every man he goes against, was on to Ruhlman's curves, and when they fought never gave him a chance to acquire confidence in himself, but kept after him from the time they started until he had him out in the sixth round.

Jeffries has been put wise to Ruhlman's methods, and from an inside source I learn that he intends to force the pace at the beginning and does not expect the fight to last over three rounds—while not such a clever boxer as the Akronite, he can hit harder and is game enough to go in and take a chance. He isn't over fond of fighting and may be depended upon to put an end to the battle as quickly as possible. If he fails to knock his opponent out in the early stages of the fight, and Ruhlman's tactics indicate his intention to prolong the struggle for a decision on points, Jeffries will doubtless resort to the methods which he employed when he fought Sharkey, hanging on and bearing down upon him in clinches until he becomes weak and defenseless. Ruhlman is not as strong as Sharkey and will hardly be able to hold Jeffries' weight as well as the sailor.

Much depends upon Harry Corbett's interpretation who are not fighting and who have their eyes fastened upon his opponent are better able to judge of the latter's weak and strong points as well as his condition than he is himself, and he restrains himself until he gets the signal from his corner—a code having been adopted and rehearsed at his training quarters until he and his advisers thoroughly understand each other—to do something. In this respect Jeffries differs from almost every other fighter of prominence who has held the title. Fitzsimmons, who enjoys the distinction of being the most crafty man that ever stepped into a ring, barring, perhaps, old Jim Mace, is so irritable in his corner that his people rarely speak to him, much less offer suggestions. Corbett only wanted to be told that he was doing all right. He was always alert and ready to take advantage of what chances were given him by his opponent, and his great knowledge of the finer points of boxing and fighting made it obvious that any suggestions from his seconds were superfluous. Advice would be wasted upon a man like Sharkey, whose courage and tenacity were his redeeming qualities. A punch on the nose would make him forget everything he ever heard and his seconds wisely refrained from giving him advice. Sullivan's axiom was set there as soon as you can, and he usually went in with a rush and a wallop which discounted all the words of caution that were given him before he began. Taking it all in all therefore I don't know but what the method adopted by Jeffries is the better one after all. He practically fights with one pair of hands and two, sometimes three, heads. I am not very sanguine that the fight will be an exceptionally great one, but I hope, long or short as it may happen to be, that the best man will win.

of the Marquis of Queensberry rules. If they are strictly observed and hitting with one hand free is permitted, Jeffries has a decided advantage, for he is a better fighter than Ruhlman, and his strength and weight give him added advantages. Ruhlman is good in protecting himself in breakaways, but his forte is long arm work, and if Referee Corbett interprets the rules so that clean breaks and no hitting in clinches shall prevail then the Akron man will have a chance to show how effective he can be in landing on a vulnerable point on the jaw.

Jeffries is a long ways from being a fistic phenomenon. In fact, he is the poorest excuse for a champion we have had since John L. Sullivan set the standard by which all holders of the title have since been compared. In none of his fights has he ever shown exceptional quality. His gigantic size and extraordinary reach have given him advantages over the men he has fought and a certain element of luck has been a factor in helping him to win out. He is cool, calculating and fearless, but he lacks the judgment to plan his fights. The responsibility of doing this has always devolved upon the men in his corner. Tommy Ryan and Billy Delaney, two of the very best ring generals the world ever saw, have been behind him in all his fights, and have invariably mapped out the course to be pursued, while to Jeffries' credit it must be said that he was ready and willing at all times to be guided by his advisers. He follows instinctively the instructions given him in his corner between rounds, and never deviates, if possible, from the plan of action. A fighter with a less phlegmatic disposition would be influenced more or less by opportunities which present themselves in a fight, but he reasons that the men in his corner

WON A QUICK FIGHT

ON THE TURF

Impromptu Battle in Which the Chinaman Showed up Well.

USED HANDS CLEVERLY

Mongolian Beat His White Opponent to a Standstill in Four Rounds.

On another page of the current issue of the POLICE GAZETTE is the portrait of a young Chinaman, Ching Fong by name, who was a participant in the other night in what was probably the most unique turf fight in the history of the ring. It took place on the river bank at Newport, Ky. Ching Fong's opponent was a well-known young man of the West End, Cincinnati, who fought under the name of "Kid Brown." The fight was the outcome of a challenge on the street by Brown, who offered to knock out the Chinaman in a couple of rounds. Ching Fong consulted his manager, Tommy Wilson, and the latter told him to go and do the best he could. A couple of carriages were secured, and with five men on each side the party moved toward Kentucky.

The battle ground was reached about 9 o'clock, and the men lost no time in getting on their ring costumes. A local sport was selected as referee and the men called to the center of the ring for instructions. At the call of time the men went at each other like a couple of tigers, hitting right and left without any regard to rules. They were warned not to rough it or fight foul, and the warning was heeded for a time, but they were soon pounding away again, and several foul blows were struck.

The Chinaman fought every inch of the ground and landed some stinging blows on his opponent's face and wind. Brown caught Ching with a right hook just as time was called and Ching staggered to his corner. In the second round Ching went in determined to do or die and was put down for seven seconds with another punch on the jaw. He got up and sent his left to the wind and the right to the jaw, and to the surprise of everyone Brown went to the ground. After taking eight seconds of the count he staggered to his feet, and there was a lively mix-up for a few seconds. In the third round there were knockdowns on both sides and the fighters were bleeding badly. The fourth round, which proved to be the last, resulted in a victory for Ching. At the call of time he sailed in at his man and never let up until he had him beat to a standstill. Brown dropped down from exhaustion, and when he got up his seconds asked him if he had enough and he replied that he had, and told them to throw up the sponge. The men were taken to a neighboring saloon, where their wounds were dressed, and the party returned to the city. Both men were badly used up. Ching Fong said after the fight: "Dat man, he no fighter. I lick whole bunch like him. He in too big hurry to get home. Could not wait for it to get over."

DOHERTY BEAT TUT RYAN.

From Australia comes the news that Bill Doherty and Tut Ryan met on Aug. 23 in a boxing contest at the Town Hall, Perth, for the heavyweight championship of Australia. Sam Grimwood, the referee, announced that Ryan was suffering from influenza. After the first two rounds, in which Doherty had the advantage, Ryan showed he was distressed, but nothing serious occurred until the sixth round. Doherty then brought Ryan to the ground with a left hook on the solar plexus. He got up again, and Doherty gave him a bad time till the end of the round. Soon after the seventh round started Doherty felled his opponent with a left swing. Half the count had gone when Ryan staggered to his feet, but he was immediately knocked down and counted out. Doherty, who was in the pink of condition, had matters practically his own way all through.

HART BEAT BEAUSCHOLTE.

Jack Beauschulte was whipped by Marvin Hart at Louisville, Ky., on Nov. 1, in the tenth round. It was Hart's first appearance since he whipped Creighton. The men fought under straight Queensberry rules at catch-weights. George Siler refereed.

Hart showed his usual speed in the first round and landed on Beauschulte's head and body, but the work was light.

In the second Hart took the aggressive again and slugged the Chicago man. Hart did all the leading in the third and fourth.

Beauschulte started the blood pouring from Hart's left eye in the fifth, and there followed a series of hot mix-ups. Hart started the eighth with a fierce rush. Beauschulte falling with Hart on top of him.

The bell saved Beauschulte in the ninth, but Hart finished him in the tenth, planting the right on the jaw, putting Beauschulte down and out.

A. N., Chicago, Ill.—A whiskey sour should be stirred, not shaken.

C. H., Washington, D. C.—He is over fifty. We do not know precisely.

F. S. N., Bannister, Mich.—Which is the most scientific game, baseball or football? Football is the most strategic.

J. B., Jamestown, N. D.—Was "Chicago Jack" Daly beaten by a rube named Nelson at Ewen, Mich., last Fourth of July? Have no record of it.

T. S., Scofield, Utah.—A bets B that Fitzsimmons has fought Tom Sharkey since he lost the championship to Jeffries. A wins; Fitz fought and beat him since then.

C. G. E., Memphis, Tenn.—G bets that there is not any premium for a half dime dated 1832. Values of old coins depend upon the demand. Inquire of some coin dealer.

R. R., Braddock, Pa.—Where is the United States Marine Band stationed, and how many are there? Washington, D. C.; number varies from fifty to seventy-five.

G. H., New York.—A bets B that the three, four, five, six, seven of clubs, or any other suit, is a royal flush; B bets it is not a royal flush. B wins; it is not. See answer to A. F. G., Santa Ana, Cal.

J. R., Scranton, Pa.—What horses ran with Salvador in that great race, and what year was it? Which particular race do you refer to? If you mean when a new record was made, Salvador ran alone, against time, over the Monmouth Park straight course in 1890.

C. H. S., Brooklyn.—A bet B that the last Broad-Sullivan fight would not go twenty rounds. Did it go twenty rounds? Who wins? Police stopped the bout with only ten seconds of the twentieth round remaining to be fought. A wins.

R. Bird, Little Falls, N. Y.—Full information about him can be had by writing to George Krause, Dewey Theatre, New York city.

W. R. and B. R., Buffalo, N. Y.—A bets that "Kid" Broad and Dave Sullivan fought six times; B bets that they met five times. Who wins? Including the fight on Oct. 14, six times.

C. S. H., Providence, R. I.—A friend of mine has made a bet that no English yacht has won a leg of any of the contests for the cup since it has been here. Valkyrie III won a race in 1895, but was disqualified.

G. C. D., Hammond, Ind.—A says Tom Sharkey and James Jeffries fought twenty-five rounds in or about the year 1890, and B says they did not fight twenty-five rounds. A wins. They fought twenty-five rounds at Coney Island, Nov. 3, 1890.

Reader, Paterson, N. J.—Do you know if two men in one boat ever rowed across the Atlantic ocean, having no other motive power than the oars? Yes, two Norwegians, named Harbo and Samuelson, and were presented with "Police Gazette" medals.

J. F. L., Poland Car Station, New Orleans, La.—According to the constitution of the United States all men are free and equal, and a colored man is entitled to all the privileges of his white brother in any part of the United States, and the law must protect him. Chicago is no exception to the rule, and the proprietor of a restaurant who ejects a colored man can be sued for damages.

W. F. K., Detroit, Mich.—Five-handed freeze-out, each having 25 chips; E edges 10, call 25; everyone passes, which makes it a jack-pot for 25 chips to each man, or, in other words, a jack-pot for 125 chips; A opens the pot, B stays and draws cards, C does likewise, D passes and E does the same; A has aces for openers, B has kings, and C has nines; D and E have already passed, as they did not draw cards, but at the same time had all their chips in the pot. Are they forced to draw cards? D and E claim that inasmuch as they did not draw cards, or, in other words passed, the player between A, B and C holding the lowest hand loses, but if B and C had also passed it would then be a show-down; C claims that inasmuch as D and E had their chips in the pot they are virtually broke, as well as A, B and C, and therefore everyone must hold cards, low man loses. If low man loses, D and E ought to have drawn cards. If they refused they are the losers.

J. J. M., Hartford, Conn.—I beg to differ with you in your answer to a reader from Pawtucket, R. I., in that game of pitch, when both parties are nine; J. M. bids three and T. G. refuses. Does not T. G. have to make four? In that case, does not T. G. go back, not having made his four, and J. M. must certainly win in the humble opinion of a good many of us up here? You are wrong. T. G. does not have to make four. He must make only as many as the highest bid.

F. R. W., Norristown, Pa.—In playing shuffle-board, A and Beach have a ship and also one other quito each on the board. Which counts, the ship hanging over most or are they discarded and the other remaining quito counted? Ship discarded and other quito counted.

D. S., Elizabeth, N. J.—Where does W. Daly, the horseman, reside? What is the height of the following jockeys: Maher, J. Reiff, Shaw and Sloan? Lives at Hartford, Conn. A letter to him, care of Washington Jockey Club, Washington, D. C., will reach him just now. 2. About five feet.

C. F. W. W., Bluffs, Ill.—I have a three-quarter violin, excellent sound and condition, made by Jacobus Stainer in 1665 (226 years old); it was captured at Look-out Mountain, Tenn., from Confederate army, and later won in a poker game. Write to the Superintendent of the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C.

W. H. S., Joplin, Mo.—F bets that Jeffries has the longest reach; S bets that Fitzsimmons has the longest reach; F bets Corbett is the most scientific; S bets Mitchell is the most scientific. I. Jeffries has the longest reach. 2. Other question depends upon a mere opinion. We would rather not decide a betting proposition on ours.

Reader, Fort Liscum, Alaska.—A claims that all match games of ten pins are rolled according to "Hoyle's Rules," ten innings of three balls each, and that the score of 300, a possible, cannot be made by rolling two balls to an inning? He also claims that in order to make 300 a player must make ten strikes and have two balls to spare, also making strikes with these remaining two balls? B claims that all match games of ten pins are rolled with ten innings of two balls each, and that the score of 300 can be made with two balls to an inning? A says a man rolling two balls to an inning cannot have two balls to spare after making a strike, as he has used one for the strike, while B claims that he can. Who is right? I. "Hoyle" is no authority in ten pins. 2. In all the big tournaments under the auspices of the American Bowling Congress, only two balls to a frame are allowed. 3. A player can make 300 with two balls, using three balls in the last frame, according to the rules.

C. S., Cleveland, O.—I see a piece in the POLICE GAZETTE about a route from Chicago to San Francisco, and your answer is to get the "League of American Wheelmen's Road-Book." Does this book give all the roads in the United States; if so, please state and where to get it? We believe so. Apply to your local L. A. W. consul in Cleveland.

DUFFY BEAT ARTIE SIMMS.

Artie Simms, the Akron, O., lightweight, who has been boosting himself along lately as an aspirant for light-weight championship honors, was defeated by Martin Duffy, of Chicago, at Detroit, Mich., on Oct. 30. George Siler was the referee. They fought ten fast rounds. Duffy, who did most of the leading throughout, got to Simms' jaw with his left repeatedly. He landed almost two blows to Simms' one. In the third round Simms was dazed when the gong sounded, but came up fresh for the fourth.

In the preliminaries Tommy Gibson, of Detroit, won over Jack Palmer, of Kansas City, and Tom McCune, of Detroit, was given the decision over Paddy Nagle, of St. Catharine, Ont.

SHERIFF DID NOT GET TIP.

At a quiet suburban road house not far from Cleveland, O., there was a little fistic exhibition given on October 27, of which Sheriff Barry did not get a tip. H. T. Badgely and George Caton were to have fought twenty rounds, but the bout only lasted four. Caton had the best of Badgely in height, weight and reach, but the latter was too clever. He put Caton out in four rounds, and quite a number who had gathered expecting to see a lively match were rather disappointed.

You will be amply repaid for ordering your next week's POLICE GAZETTE at once. It will contain a splendid double page of portraits of Jeffries and Ruhlin in training.

"AUSTRALIAN" RYAN WAS EASY.

"Australian Jimmy" Ryan was no match for Jack Root, of Chicago, when they fought on Oct. 30, at Louisville, Ky., before the Olympic Athletic Club. They fought clean breaks. "Bat" Masterson was referee. It was at catch weights, Ryan about 165, Root 161. Billy Stiff challenged the winner.

Root won in the second round, knocking Ryan out after the latter had made a game but fruitless effort to get back in the fighting game. He put up a stiff fight in the first round and had a shade the better of it, but it was the last charge of the old guard.

Ryan had said the fight wouldn't go the limit. He went at Root fiercely at the sound of the bell, shot a left to the face and surprised Jack by raising a welt on his left eye with a stiff wallop. Ryan missed several vicious swings that would have lifted Root's block off if they had come close enough. Root saw that he couldn't take too much chance even with a one-eyed man who had such a stiff punch left. In the second he was careful and kept Ryan off until he saw a chance to send a right plump on the jaw. Ryan went down, got to his knees at five, and tried desperately to get up. It was useless, and as Masterson said ten he pitched forward again, but was caught by his seconds. Ryan put up a game fight.

In the preliminary Pete Traynor knocked out Young McGovern, making two knockouts in two and a half rounds of fighting.

Eight world's records at Memphis. Wonderful track or wonderful timers—which?

Little Boy should be prepared for a trial against the world's pacing record of 1:59½.

It is reported that the Whitely stable refused $12,000 for the pacing mare, Edith W., 2:05.

John R. Gentry is in training again and lately worked a mile in 2:20. He will be seen in public next season.

William C. Whitney heads the list of winning owners for the Morris Park fall meeting. His horses earned $20,435.50.

Barney Demarest has quit the "Garden of Eden," over in New Jersey and is now running a hotel at Goshen, N. Y.

Green B. Morris, the veteran Western turfman, has shipped all of his horses to California to race at Tanforan and Oakland.

Eolus, who lately took a record of 2:24 1-4 down in Maine, is seventeen years old. He is the sire of Paul T., 2:18½, and Linnie G., 2:20.

All the big Western stables, including the Schorrs, Pat Dunne, Charley Ellison and Sam Hildreth, will race at the Louisiana winter meeting.

President Ebbetts, of the Brooklyn Baseball Club, has received the signed contract of Catcher Charles F. Fuller, of the Fort Wayne Club.

Jockey Woods, who has been riding on Metropolitan tracks with some success, has left for California, where he will ride for J. W. Schorr this winter.

L. V. Harkness has sold to T. E. Thomas, of Niles, Mich., for $5,000, the great trotting sire Allie Wilkes, 2:15, sire of Jupe, 2:07½; Arlington, 2:06½, and thirty others in the list.

"Cash" Sloan, the American jockey, fell while riding on the race course at Warsaw, Russia, recently. He was picked up unconscious, but revived before he was taken to his residence.

A. E. Tysoe, the British champion half-mile runner, died recently in London. He defeated J. F. Cregan, of Princeton, at that distance at the Anglo-American athletic meeting in 1900.

Crescent at the Kansas City Driving Park on October 24, broke the world's trotting record for a mile on a half-mile course, making the distance in 2:09½. The previous record, 2:09½, was made at Toledo.

There are 303 nominations for the English Derby for 1903. King Edward VII. has six entries, all sired by Persimmons. The Duke of Portland has the largest number of entries—ten yearlings. Sir Blundell has eight.

Califolia's great pacer, Sir Albert S., 2:03 3-4, retires from his first campaign with a record which no other horse in America has equaled this year. He started a green horse and has won every heat of the six races in which he took the word.

Willie Hoppe scored a clean triumph over his elders in the 18-inch balk line tournament in New York City. The boy defeated Orn Morningstar in the final game by a score of 200 to 191, thus winning first place in the tournament without any defeats.

Among the big stables which will go to New Orleans are those of J. E. Madden, C. Mackay, J. J. McCafferty, Billy Barrick, A. H. and D. H. Morris, W. C. Daly, James McLaughlin, "Snapper" Garrison, Tim Sullivan, Frank Herold and Frank Farrell.

Charles Marvin, the veteran trotting-horse driver, has sold to C. K. G. Billings at Memphis the trotting horse Captor, 2:09½, a brown gelding by Electric Bell. Marvin has won a number of rich races with Captor, including the Walnut Hall Cup.

Paul Cahors, the French wrestler, will be seen in this country shortly. He is the first foreign wrestler with designs on American wrestlers who is not a giant. Both John Flening and Jack McCormack want matches with the Frenchman, who is said to be very clever.

Fred Burns, the veteran announcer, writes that he has a wrestler under his wing who he thinks capable of defeating Harvey Parker, George Bothner or Alex Ulman. Those who have seen Burns' wrestler say he is one of the best lightweights who ever performed on the mat.

Nancy Hanks, 2:04, is now in the great brood mare list, having produced Admiral Dewey 2:14½, by Bingen, and Ralph Hanks, 2:27½, by Ralph Wilkes—Exchange. Nancy Hanks never was bred to Ralph Wilkes, and the only one of her offspring to hear the bell ring is Admiral Dewey.

John McKay, who for three years, with Jake Gaudaur, was double scull champion of the world, died at Fern Ridge, Mo., recently. McKay was born in Dartmouth, N. S., but resided in Boston many years, where he won many races and was an instructor in rowing. He was about forty years old.
